More than 50 countries to be represented at conference

More than 300 people from more than 50 countries will give formal presentations in plenary sessions, symposia, and small group sessions during the conference part of The Deaf Way Conference and Festival July 9-14.

The presentations cover various aspects of the four Deaf Way thematic areas: deaf history, culture, language, and the arts. Plenary speakers will present major themes in these areas at two daily sessions, 8:30 to 10 a.m. and 2 to 3:30 p.m., in the Regency Ballroom of the Omni Shoreham Hotel, the conference headquarters.

Plenary addresses will be interpreted into American Sign Language and International Sign, spoken English, Spanish, and French, and also captioned in English. Symposia sessions will also be provided with full interpretation.

Festival events on Kendall Green follow the daily conference activities.

Gallaudet President King Jordan will deliver the opening address on Monday, July 10, at 8:30 a.m. He will be joined by Sen. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa) and other guests of honor.

The Monday afternoon plenary addresses, delivered by Hurst Hannum and Dr. Mary Malzkahn, will focus on the thematic area "Human Rights and Deaf People." Hannum, a Washington, D.C., lawyer and expert on international human rights, will analyze ways international human rights are relevant to the deaf community. Malzkahn, an assistant professor with Gallaudet's Government Department, will focus on the "Deaf President Now" movement.

The Tuesday, July 11, plenary addresses at 8:30 a.m. on "The Study of Sign Language in Society," focus on Swedish Sign Language. Speakers are Brita Berman, a faculty member at the University of Stockholm's Linguistics Institute, and Lars Wallin, the first deaf Ph.D. candidate in the university's Department of Sign Language.

The Tuesday afternoon plenary speakers, on the topic of "The Concept of Deaf Culture," are Paddy Ladd of Great Britain and Kampol Suwanarat of Thailand. Ladd, co-founder of the National Union of the Deaf and the London Deaf Video Project, will discuss deaf communities as linguistic and cultural entities. Suwanarat, general manager of the National Association of the Deaf in Thailand, will focus on the history and development of the deaf community in Thailand.

The plenary session on Wednesday morning, July 12, addresses the theme "Deaf People in the Arts: Struggles and Successes," and features Gregorio-

Jesus Jaen Arrabal of Spain and Ann Silver of the United States. Jaen Arrabal will present a personal account of his struggles as a deaf artist in Madrid. Silver, an author, journalist, and film/television analyst affiliated with Silent News, will look at Hollywood and how it views deaf people.

Dancers perform at White House

The Gallaudet Dance Company represented the United States in the International Very Special Arts Festival held in Washington, D.C., last week.

The dancers, under the direction of Dr. Diane Hottendorf, shared a stage on the White House lawn June 15 with Pearl Bailey, Marsha Mason, and Kenny Rogers as they performed for President and Mrs. Bush and an audience of about 1,100—primarily performers and artists from special populations worldwide who were chosen to participate in the week-long festival. The White House performance is expected to air on CBS.

As part of the festival, the Gallaudet dancers performed at the Kennedy Center on June 17. Also performing at that event was the National Deaf Dance Theatre, under the direction of Sue Gill.

Finnish Association of the Deaf and general secretary of the World Federation of the Deaf, will address the role of deaf studies in developing deaf awareness and advocacy.

Thursday morning, July 13, begins with plenary addresses by Serena Corazza of Italy and Sam Supalla of the United States on the thematic area "Sign Language and Education." Corazza, who spent 1987 at Gallaudet studying linguistics on a Mason-Perkins scholarship, will discuss effects of Italian mainstreaming projects and consequences of the progressive closing of special schools for deaf students in Italy. Supalla, a research assistant at the University of Illinois, will address the topic of equal educational opportunity for deaf people and the role of ASL in education.

"Reflections of Deaf Culture in Deaf Humor" is the theme for the Thursday afternoon plenary session, led by M.J. Bienvenu and Guy Bouchauveau. Bienvenu is co-director of the Bicultural Center in Riverdale, Md., and Bouchauveau, former French Sign Language teacher, is a tour guide for the deaf public at the Museum of Science and Industry.

Friday's plenary session, at 8:30 a.m. July 14, focuses on the theme of "Misconceptions of Deaf Culture in the Media and the Arts." Speakers Doug Alker from Great Britain and Gunilla

Wagstrom-Lundqvist of Sweden will address the topic from their experiences as deaf people dealing with the media. Alker is director of community services for the Royal National Institute for the Deaf in London and Wagstrom-Lundqvist, a former member of Silent Theater and the National Theatre of the Deaf, is currently a TV producer at the Swedish Educational Broadcast Company.

In addition to plenary sessions, a number of special symposia are scheduled. They include a Tuesday morning panel discussion led by Phyllis Frelich on deaf people in the entertainment industry and a Thursday morning symposium on the "Deaf President Now" movement, featuring the four student leaders of the March 1988 event.

The conference also features other events at the Omni Shoreham Hotel, including poster presentations, more than 100 exhibits, TV and video shows, and daily technology sessions.

Shuttle bus service will run between Kendall Green and the Omni Shoreham Hotel daily from early morning until 11:45 p.m.

Gallaudet faculty and staff may register for The Deaf Way at a special reduced rate of $125 for the entire week's conference and festival activities. A daily registration rate is also available.

Students attend four-week programs

Oustanding hearing impaired high school students from 12 states and two foreign countries will attend the four-week Young Scholars and Summer Science Programs at Gallaudet University from June 25 to July 21.

Now in its fifth year, the Young Scholars Program (YSP) will take 16 students, including five from Great Britain and one from Scotland, through issues related to deafness and social science. YSP students will examine what happened during the Deaf President Now movement and how social changes in society are affecting deaf people. The scholars will also use statistical programs on IBM computers to analyze social science data.

Another 15 students will work with teachers in one of three research teams in the University's second Summer Science Program (SSP). Each team will conduct experiments in biology, chemistry, or physics, study all three disciplines by the end of the program, and go home with materials for a follow-up activity.

SSP also attracts teachers who want to learn more about teaching science to deaf students. This year's program includes three visiting teachers from Ohio, Mississippi, and Illinois.

Many teachers who've had extensive coursework in deaf education find themselves teaching biology or chemistry with little or no training in how to teach science, said Dr. Richard Meisegeier, director of Gallaudet's Honors Program, which sponsors both YSP and SSP. "The teachers go away from here really thrilled and excited to do the things they did here in their own science classes," he said.

Students in both the YSP and SSP programs will participate in Gallaudet's Personal Discovery program, involving physical challenges and teamwork, and will meet deaf professionals working in areas related to the topics they are studying. This year's YSP students will serve as volunteers at The Deaf Way Conference and Festival as well as visit the Capitol, the White House and the Washington Post. SSP students will meet scientists at the National Institutes of Health and the Environmental Protection Agency as well as visit a water treatment plant, Haines Point, Great Falls, and other areas.

Although the two programs' daytime activities are separate, the 31 students in both programs share a dormitory and some recreational activities.

The cost of each program is more than $3,000 per student, but the students pay only $1,500 to attend YSP. A major grant from the National Science Foundation, with additional support from Gallaudet, has enabled the Honors Program to charge this year's SSP students only $150 each.
